Good Afternoon

August is almost gone and the September rush will be on. We did a small harvest yesterday, Brianna, with more to follow soon. Due to the small crop this year, fewer opportunities will be available at harvest parties, sorry. I'd like to have more crop to have more parties, maybe next year, pray for a mile winter.

Yesterday Mary had some excitement at our Paynesville home. She was going to take the lawnmower out and got stung by a wasp or yellow jacket. When she was feeling back to normal, I teased her that on one eye she looked Asian like our other daughter-in-law, she did smile a little. Last night my mission was to spray the nest and remove the problem. I snuck up to the nest at 10 pm and sprayed an entire can of the killing agent, then ran back to the house. Lots of dead yellow jacket on the ground this morning but about 2/3 are still buzzing. I know what our three sons would do next when they were kids. Either spray a water hose to knock the nest down or attach a long pole on top the van and drive to the nest and knock the nest down while safe inside the vehicle. This options sounds very much like the Red/Green Show, but it could work.

After reading a little online, I discovered that the group called wasps include yellow jackets and hornets and that Mary was probably stung by a hornet. Based upon the nesting pattern, how do I know it was most likely a hornet? This is my trivia question, to win a free bottle of wine send your answers to donmillner@gmail.com . And always remember, if you are the only correct answer, what an easy bottle of wine.

Ooops, last week announcing the medal winners on the ICCWC wine competition, I mention 4 wines won bronze and forgot to mention the fourth winner was Mein Onkel. Named after my deceased brother Dick Millner, if you like this wine he most likely is looking down smiling.

In the Vineyard Update:

What grapes we have they are ripening even though we didn't have 90 degree days. Jon believes it may be that we had a good number of sunny days. As for now, I believe we have an adequate number of volunteers signed up for the harvest. If I am wrong I will write of it here later.

*Thank you
Don*
